THE BLOCK THAT DISAPPEARED

fb: Ogden Utah

If you could stand on 25th Street in Ogden and look across at the 300 block more than a century ago, you probably would not think there was anything particularly remarkable about it. There were drugstores and saloons, clothing shops and restaurants, billiard rooms and barbers, furnished rooms upstairs and merchants making a living downstairs.

Doors opened every morning, awnings stretched over the sidewalk, signs competed for attention and people came and went carrying packages, newspapers, pay envelopes and all the ordinary worries of everyday life.

Yet when we look at these old photographs today, something happens. After a while, we stop seeing buildings and begin seeing lives.

A 1906 map of the north side of 25th Street between Grant and Washington gives us a glimpse behind the storefronts. At 300 25th Street was a drugstore with offices above. Elsewhere were furnished rooms, a bicycle shop, gambling rooms, restaurants, saloons and billiard rooms. Behind the façades were kitchens, storage rooms, stairways, sheds and back rooms. At 300 25th, T. H. Carr operated his Rexall drugstore. Later the address became associated with the M. & M. Tavern, which advertised in 1947 that it had been serving Ogden for thirty-nine years. Imagine the conversations accumulated inside those walls — railroad men after work, friends meeting for a beer, someone celebrating a promotion while the fellow two stools away wondered how he would tell his wife he'd lost his job.

A few doors away, 320 25th Street lived many lives. The White Elephant Saloon sold wines, liquors and cigars. The Metropolitan Pool and Billiard Rooms provided handsome tables and a gathering place where news from around the country could be posted on a blackboard.

Later came clothing merchants including L. Gordon, The Toggery and Hub Clothing Company. Somewhere inside one of those stores, a young man probably stood before a mirror in his first good suit while a clerk tugged at the shoulders and assured him it fit perfectly. Perhaps it was for his first serious job. Perhaps his wedding.

Other businesses followed:

Hamburger House, Regal Cleaners and the Ogden Book & Curio Store. At 338 25th Street stood the Meca, offering fishing tackle, bamboo poles, reels, flies, lines and bait. Barber shops occupied the block as well. Upstairs, furnished rooms remind us that people didn't merely shop and work here. Some slept here, looking from second-story windows onto the life of 25th Street below.

This block witnessed prosperity, Depression and war. People bought birthday presents when they could, took their children downtown, fell in love and found reasons to laugh. Young men undoubtedly stopped here for a haircut, meal or drink before leaving for military service. Some returned. Others did not.

By the early 1960s, Ogden had another vision for this part of downtown. The nineteenth-century commercial buildings were removed and the new Federal Building took their place. To many people then, it represented progress, efficiency, permanence and a confident future.

Today, that building is itself more than sixty years old.

But architecture is only part of what disappeared.

What cannot be reconstructed are the thousands of insignificant moments that gave these buildings meaning: a hamburger after a movie, a first suit, a last drink with an old friend, a haircut before a wedding, a fishing pole bought for a child or a merchant counting the day's receipts after locking the door.

Nobody photographed most of those moments because nobody thought they mattered.

The people who walked through these doors didn't know they were creating history. They were simply working, shopping, eating, drinking, meeting friends, searching for jobs and hurrying home to someone waiting for them.

Perhaps that is the real story of this vanished block of 25th Street.

Buildings do not remember us, but for a while they hold the places where our memories happen.

The block is gone.

ELM TREE MUSEUM OF WEST WEBER

HOUSING HUNDRED FIFTY YEARS OF PIONEER ARTIFACTS, ANTIQUES AND TREASURES BY JERRY HANCOCK

By Jacob Cox

Something about the way Jerry Hancock moves through his property tells you everything. He stops at a massive tree near the road and points at it with his cane: “black elm”, he says, “brought from England as a six-inch sapling in the 1860s by a man named Archibald McFarland.” He points to a narrow wooden building beside the fence — the last surviving railroad telegraph booth from the line that once bridged the Great Salt Lake on trestles. Then the outhouse, WPA stamped on the floor, built by a Civilian Conservation Corps camp passing through West Weber during the Roosevelt era.

Each object has a story. Each story has a name.

Jerry Hancock is the founder and curator of Elm Tree Corner, a living archive spread across ten rooms of a 157-year-old Victorian farmhouse and a fully stocked outbuilding in West Weber. The museum preserves the history of the Hancock and McFarland families, pioneer life in the community, and the broader story of an area that grew along the old Indian trail running past his front door.

The collection didn’t start as a museum. It started as a promise Hancock made to himself from a hospital bed. After a heart attack, then a car accident, he resolved that if he made it home he would label everything — the artifacts dug up from the garden, the Victorian valentines found in the attic, especially the antique bone buttons found on the property — before his family could mistake them for junk.

“If I can just come through this and get home,” he says in the documentary, “I’ll start labeling everything that I’ve got.”

That documentary is Elm Tree Corner, a full-length film produced by the Weber County Heritage Foundation and directed and edited by filmmaker Jacob Cox. The Foundation recognized Elm Tree Corner as exactly the kind of place that could disappear quietly: a property full of labeled, storied objects guided by a person who knows where every one of them came from, but not yet documented on film.

The film captures Hancock walking, pointing, explaining, and even joking. He narrates how Archibald McFarland bought fifteen acres at ten dollars an acre from the man who owned all of Weber County. He tells the story of a wagon Roy High School borrowed for a production of Paint Your Wagon, returned with the tongue sawed off, and which was years later made whole when a neighbor tearing down a barn found a matching tongue in the loft with a compatible configuration. Hancock calls moments like this miracles, and the museum is full of them.

Elm Tree Corner premiered at Cinema 502 to a warm reception. Jerry’s humor landed. The story captivated. Hancock ends the film the same way he ends every tour: with a photo in the old carriage everyone wearing a hat and reminding visitors to “Enjoy the past to make the future better.”

The Weber County Heritage Foundation produces this kind of work at a moment when preservation nonprofits are facing tighter funding and harder choices. Elm Tree Corner is one answer to the question of what to preserve. There are, certainly, many others: histories in sheds and unlabeled boxes across Weber County, waiting for someone to notice they are still alive and for their stories to be told.

Elm Tree Corner is available to watch now on YouTube [QR code]. To visit the museum or learn more about the Weber County Heritage Foundation, including how to become a member or support local preservation efforts.

OGDEN EXCHANGE BUILDING

STOCKYARDS

By CHRIS HANSEN
Historic Preservationist
Utah State Historic Agency

Another Ogden gem created by prominent local architect Leslie S. Hodgson, the Ogden Union Stockyard Exchange Building was constructed in 1930 - 1931. The building is noteworthy for its history and its architecture. Located at 600 Exchange Road in West Ogden, it was designed to highlight the influence the surrounding stockyards had on the livestock industry.

Historically, the building is significant in the areas of agriculture and commerce, for its association with the economic success of the Ogden area by contributing to the livestock industry. Ogden is well known for its involvement in the railroad industry, yet it should also be recognized for the important contribution it made in the livestock trade, particularly between the years of 1920 and 1960. After 1960, Ogden began losing its strength as being the top shipping center for cattle, as more slaughterhouses were moving closer to where cattle were being raised.

The primary original use of the Exchange Building was as offices of the Ogden Union Stockyards and other related agribusinesses. When the stockyards were no longer used for livestock, the structure was adapted for other commercial purposes (such as an insurance office and leather goods store in the 1960s), use as a trade school (in the 1970s), later as a drug and alcohol rehabilitation center, and more recently a haunted house attraction. When the haunted house ceased operations, the structure was left vacant and started to fall further into disrepair. In 2014, Ogden City purchased the structure along with the rest of the old stockyards with broad redevelopment plans in mind.

Architecturally, the building is important as it was designed by Hodgson and is one of the earliest Art Deco-influenced structures in Utah. It was a precursor to Hodgson's transition into a more full-blown Deco design style in the modern era of the 1930s, as exemplified by the United States Forest Service Building, the Ogden Municipal Building, and Ogden High School. The Exchange Building is not as ornate, yet one can see the similarities of the ideas being expressed that were so prominent on later Hodgson structures. The building sits upon a brick and concrete pedestal where the observer's eyes begin to gaze upward following the brick pilasters to the geometric capital. Just below the capitals are heads of sheep, bulls, and hogs which tell the architectural story of the purpose and use of the structure - showcasing the power the Ogden stockyards had gained in the agricultural industry. Art Deco was considered advanced and modern, and by designing an agricultural building with an Art Deco façade gave the appearance that the agricultural industry in Ogden indeed equated progress. The City of Ogden was founded as a Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints agricultural community in 1851, and although with the many changes the city had experienced over the past 80 years since the building was constructed, its agricultural roots had not been left behind, in fact just the opposite.

As part of mitigation for Ogden City's role in the redevelopment of the surrounding stockyards area and removal of several historic structures and features at the site, the city obtained and secured the Exchange Building, and offered to sell it to a developer that would restore it and make it the centerpiece of the new "Ogden Exchange Development." Additionally, the building was listed on Ogden City's local historic register and the National Register of Historic Places in 2015, opening up opportunities to take advantage of Historic Tax Credits and other financial incentives to rehabilitate the building. Several proposals and starts to rehabilitate the building have fallen flat over the past decade, but with a new developer, owner, and with the backing of the city and preservation community, current plans and agreements are underway once again to start the work of preserving the historic building while adhering to historic preservation standards.

The Facts and Fiction of Gentle Kate

Few figures from Utah's frontier era have inspired as many stories as Kate Flint—better known as “Gentile Kate.” For generations, Ogden residents have repeated the tale that after Corinne's fortunes declined, the legendary madam relocated to Ogden and established a brothel near the Chapman Hotel on lower 25th Street. Like many good frontier stories, however, the evidence tells a different tale.

Kate Flint rose to prominence during the late 1860s in Corinne, Utah. It was a bustling railroad town established as a non-Mormon commercial center on the transcontinental railroad. Nicknamed the “Gentile Capital of Utah,” Corinne attracted gamblers, saloonkeepers, merchants, railroad workers, and, of course, prostitutes.

Among them, Kate Flint became the town's most recognizable businesswoman. She reportedly accumulated considerable wealth through real estate investments, loans, and her successful house of prostitution. Contemporary accounts described her as intelligent, fashionable, and financially savvy, making her one of the most talked-about figures in early Utah. The story most Ogden residents know of begins after the completion of the transcontinental railroad.

As railroad traffic shifted and Ogden became the region's dominant transportation hub, earning the nickname “Junction City,” Corinne's economy began to decline. Businesses of every variety relocated south, leading many to assume that Kate Flint did as well.

According to local hearsay, Kate purchased or operated a brothel adjacent to the Chapman Hotel on lower 25th Street. Another colorful story claims that after Brigham Young died in 1877 and his possessions were auctioned, Kate purchased his elegant carriage and proudly drove it through Ogden's streets so everyone could see her riding in the late church leader's coach. Each of these theories are entertaining stories, but no contemporary evidence places her in Ogden and nearly every version of the Ogden story can be traced back to a single, unreliable source.

In 1925, historian and author Bernard DeVoto wrote that Kate had become: “...a respected part of the business life of the town, a speculator in real estate, the most liberal customer of the stores; she was, too, an unofficial great lady.”

DeVoto further claimed that visiting dignitaries were expected to call upon her because of her wit and fashionable dress, and that she operated almost like a banker by making loans and mortgages, although, he noted, she “never lent a penny to a Mormon.”

While DeVoto's writing helped cement the legend, he offered no documentation connecting Kate Flint to Ogden. However, later writers repeated the account until it became accepted as local folklore. Historical records place Kate Flint not in Ogden, but in Salt Lake City. By 1872 she was operating a house of prostitution there. Two years later, in 1874, Alderman Jeter Clinton ordered the closure of her Salt Lake City establishment as part of an effort to suppress houses of prostitution.

Rather than quietly accepting the decision, Kate sued Clinton and the Salt Lake City Council, seeking compensation for furniture, goods, and property destroyed when her business was shut down.

The lawsuit became so prominent that even Brigham Young commented on it in a letter to his son, Alpheus, on November 18, 1875: “A most extraordinary verdict was rendered by a jury in this city last night... In the case of Kate Flint vs. Jeter Clinton et al. (in reality the city council) the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, assessing the damages at $7,000.” ($7,000 would be the equivalent of $212,493 today). The case demonstrates that during the very years she was supposedly operating in Ogden, Kate Flint was actively managing her business and fighting legal battles in Salt Lake City.

Could Kate Flint have visited Ogden? Certainly. Like many entrepreneurs of the railroad era, she likely traveled throughout northern Utah.

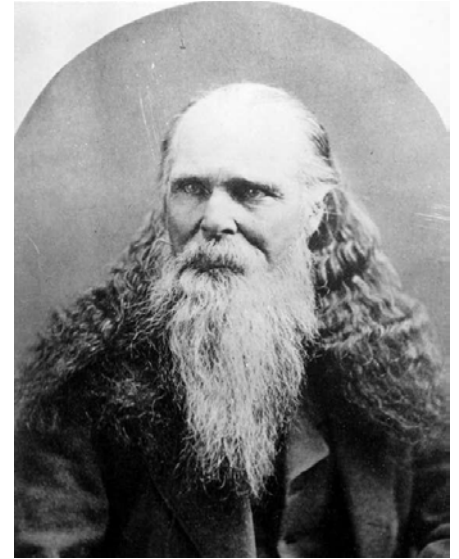

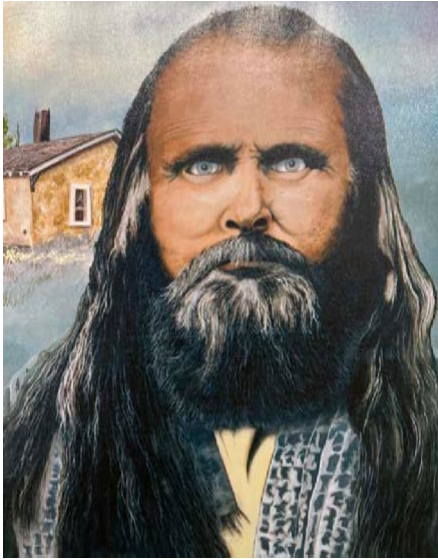

However, did she own property in Ogden or operate a brothel next to the Chapman Hotel? To date, no surviving city directories, tax records, deeds, newspapers, court documents, or business records have confirmed that claim. Instead, the legend likely developed because it fit the larger story of Ogden's rise after Corinne's decline.

As gambling halls, saloons, and other businesses migrated to Junction City, residents may have naturally assumed that Corinne's most famous madam had followed them. Whether true or not, the story of Gentle Kate reflects how easily folklore becomes local history. It also serves as a reminder that the most colorful stories are not always the most accurate. While Kate Flint undoubtedly became one of Utah's most famous frontier women, the documentary evidence places her success—and her legal troubles—in Corinne and Salt Lake City, not on Ogden's historic 25th Street.

BRUCE WOOLSEY - LOCAL ARTIST FOR SIXTY YEARS

HIS WORK AND STORY ABOUT HIS ORIGINAL PORTER ROCKWELL OIL PAINTING ON THE LABEL OF OGDEN'S OWN DISTILLERY PORTER FLAVORED WHISKEYS

By Ron J. Atencio

“Those deep blue eyes captured mine as I was painting him. It was as if I became part of him. It is the only painting I completed from start to finish, nonstop, in a week’s time,” said Bruce Woolsey of the original oil portrait he painted of Orrin Porter Rockwell in 1979.

The portrait was commissioned by Mike Steele, a great-great-great-grandson of Rockwell on his mother’s side of the family. Steele provided an original photograph of his famous ancestor that had been passed down through the family for generations. The same photograph resides in the BYU Special Collections library. Several copies must have been made for the family, with one passing down through the generations and eventually to Mike.

Bruce began working at Inkley’s studio at 40th Street and Adams Avenue in Ogden in 1971. He met Mike in 1976, and three years later, Mike asked Bruce to turn that treasured family photograph into an oil painting for posterity.

Bruce remembers the portrait as the first and only work, commissioned or otherwise, that he began one day and did not put down until it was finished a week later. It was pure inspiration. He felt Rockwell’s deep blue eyes drew him into a glimpse of the actual man, not merely the notorious and sometimes exaggerated legend, but the person who lived beneath it.

Little did Bruce know that the image he created would one day appear on a well-known whiskey popular both locally and around the country, produced by Ogden’s Own Distillery: Porter’s Fire. How it got there is a long, interesting and winding story.

When the original portrait was finished, Bruce turned it over to Mike Steele, and it became part of the Rockwell family’s property. Bruce has not seen the painting since, and after Mike passed away, he lost track of where it went. He believes it is likely still hanging in the home of one of Rockwell’s descendants, passed down as an inheritance, and hopes it will continue through that family lineage.

Before Bruce let the painting go, however, he had Ron Inkley photograph it and create a professional negative. Years later, that negative allowed him to produce giclées of the portrait and, more recently, poster prints. Fine Arts Gallery on Washington Boulevard produced 20 giclées. Bruce still has two of them in his studio. The rest were sold, along with several larger poster prints originally made for an art exhibition in Salt Lake City.

The tale takes an ominous twist. Thirty years after completing the original oil portrait of Porter Rockwell, Bruce was purging files in his office. He was about to throw out a file folder when, lo and behold, something fell to the floor: the very negative he had made in 1979 to print one copy of the painting for a student who had requested it. Had she not perhaps no label.

He was flabbergasted. He had often thought about the negative and wondered where it had gone among his many years of files and accumulated materials. There it was, almost as if it were saying, “It is time, Bruce, to bring me to life again.”

He did just that. He decided to make giclées in 2015, using what was still a relatively new printing technique at the time. If not for that twist of fate, when the negative decided to reveal itself, Bruce’s painting would not be on the bottle of Porter’s Fire, and we would not be talking about it now.

While those prints were being produced at Fine Arts Gallery, Steve Conlin, an early partner in Ogden’s Own Distillery, saw the image and contacted Bruce about using it for the distillery’s newly produced Porter’s Fire whiskey.

They reached an agreement allowing the company to use the portrait while Bruce retained the right to sell his own prints and giclées, as he has continued to do.

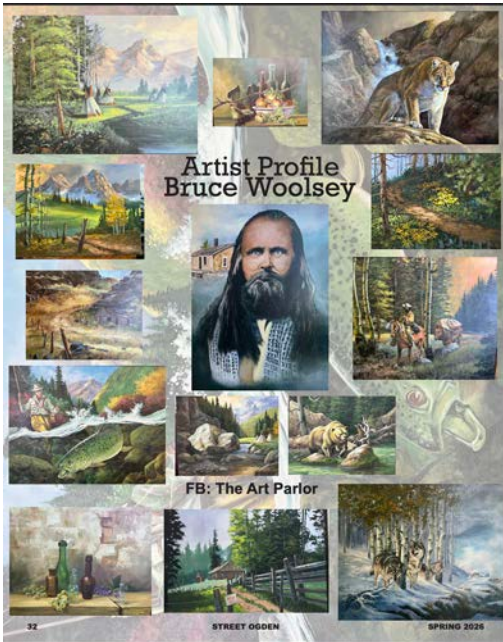

Today, the portrait appears on Porter’s Fire bottles and in illuminated signs promoting the brand. The next time those piercing blue eyes stare out from behind a local bar, or from a bottle brought home from the state liquor store or Ogden’s Own shop on Stockway Drive, you will know the path this particular image traveled to get there.

Ogden’s Own Distillery was established in 2009 by founder Tim Smith, who served as its president at the time Porter’s Fire was developed. Its products nod to Ogden’s colorful and rebellious railroad-town past, particularly the history and folklore surrounding Historic 25th Street.

We reached out to Smith, Founder and Creator, now the former president of Ogden’s Own, about the creation of Porter’s Fire.

“I love that you’re doing an article about ol’ Porter. I fell in love with his character immediately while learning about Utah history. I’ve read quite a few books about him and love finding mentions of him in other Utah history books. It was such an easy decision to go with his name and imagery due to Fireball Cinnamon Whisky being so popular at the time. There were a few other potential names discussed amongst the investors, and I was absolutely set on ‘Porter’s Fire’ and proofing it at 33.3% ABV, 66.6 proof. Steve Conlin hired the artist. I don’t remember his name off the top of my head, but I was pleased with the acquisition.”

Porter Rockwell became known as “The Destroying Angel” and developed a reputation as one of the most formidable gunmen of the Mormon frontier. Contemporary accounts and later folklore became so intertwined that separating the historical Rockwell from the legendary Rockwell can be difficult. The Utah History Encyclopedia describes him as a man famous for his toughness, marksmanship, nerve and fierce loyalty. Porter Rockwell exists somewhere between documented history and Utah mythology.

One of the most enduring stories involves his famously long hair. After Rockwell returned from imprisonment in Missouri in 1843, Joseph Smith is said to have promised him protection as long as he remained faithful and did not cut his hair: "Cut not thy hair, and no bullet or blade can harm thee."

Rockwell had spent months imprisoned after being accused of the 1842 attempted assassination of former Missouri Governor Lilburn Boggs, who had issued Missouri's infamous 1838 "Extermination Order" against the Mormons. Boggs survived, and Rockwell was eventually released after no indictment was brought against him.

Rockwell was involved in violence and accused of serious crimes during his lifetime. In 1877, he was indicted in connection with the deaths of members of the Aiken party, but he died of natural causes on June 9, 1878, before the case went to trial. Joseph Smith's prediction came true.

More than a century after Rockwell's death, that unmistakable face found its way onto the easel of Ogden-area artist Bruce Woolsey, and eventually onto Porter's Fire labels, including Peach, Huckleberry, Peanut Butter and, most recently, Loaded Apple.

Bruce has been painting in oils for more than 60 years and recently turned 82, but he has had a brush in his hand since childhood. Beginning as a young man in 1971, he has operated more than a dozen studios in Ogden. Now a strong and ambitious 82-year-old, he owns Art Parlor, his Washington Terrace gallery, classroom and framing shop. He also continues to paint in the studio behind his longtime home on Cherry Drive, the house his father had built in 1951, where Bruce still lives with his wife, Sandy.

Asked how many original works he has created over that half-century, Bruce paused to consider the question. His answer: more than 500. He currently owns only about 20 of them, having sold the others along with many giclées made from his originals. Those original oil paintings and several giclées are on exhibit at the LAB on Washington Boulevard through the end of October presented by Street Ogden. After the exhibit comes down, they can be seen again at his Art Parlor studio.

His work is rooted mostly in nature, capturing both wild landscapes and the animals that inhabit them. He is particularly known for his wolves, horses and buffalo. His paintings can be seen at Art Parlor, 385 E. 5000 South in Washington Terrace, where he spends much of his time teaching classes and working in the framing shop and painting.

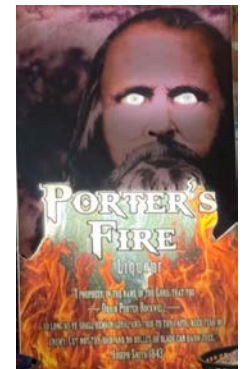

Porter Rockwell prints are available for $25 at Local Artisan Collective in The Junction, Four Sisters Gift Shop on Historic 25th Street, the Ogden's Own Distillery store on Stockman Way and Bruce's Art Parlor.

The story of this now familiar image of Orrin Porter Rockwell has followed an interesting, weaving path across nearly half a century: from an original photograph of Porter, to the original oil painting for a descendant by Bruce, to a professional negative created to make a print for a student, then to giclées and prints hanging in homes throughout Ogden and beyond, and finally to a whiskey label known across Utah and many states, made from an original digital copy provided by Fine Arts Gallery, still in Ogden's Own Distillery's possession and used still in different configurations, which printed Bruce's giclées and can still make even more along with posters.

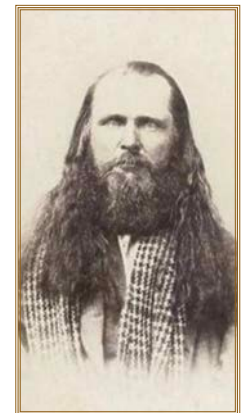

The journey spans many mediums of art and photography as technology progressed through the years. Yet Bruce still simply takes his brush and paints on the canvas he knows so well.

Bruce is now at a high point in his career that has included more than a dozen studios, over 500 original oil paintings and countless hours absorbed in the natural world he portrays. Today, he takes particular pride in passing his God-given gifts and knowledge to the students who regularly study under his tutelage. Teaching has become another way for his work to live beyond him.

Art has a way of finding its own course beyond the artist, as if it has a life and history of its own. We see it when we enter museums and stand before the work of the masters. Bruce Woolsey's paintings will travel through lives, homes and history as well. The enduring blue-eyed portrait of Porter Rockwell has already begun, and continues that journey.

EATING LIKE WE BELONG TOGETHER

GARDENS • FARMERS MARKETS
LOCAL: SMALL BUSINESSES • SMALL FARMS
FRUIT STANDS • GATHERING SPACES

By Anne Dunaway
Urban Prairie Agriculture owner & founder

There was a time when feeding yourself meant knowing people.

You knew who grew the tomatoes. You knew whose family raised the beef. You knew which neighbor had too many zucchini, whose apple tree was having a ridiculous year, and who made bread so good you planned dinner around it.

Food moved through a community, and relationships moved with it.

Then, somewhere along the way, we traded much of that for convenience.

Now our food can travel a thousand miles to reach us without requiring us to know a single person along the way.

We walk into a store, pick something from a shelf, scan it, pay a corporation headquartered somewhere else, and leave. The farmer doesn't know we ate what they grew. We don't know the farmer. The person stocking the shelf probably doesn't know either of us.

It is incredibly efficient.

And incredibly lonely.

I think about this often because I work in local food, and one of the things I've learned is that local food isn't really just about food.

It's about proximity.

When you buy lettuce from someone who grows it down the road, suddenly that lettuce has a story attached to it. Maybe you've stood at the farmer's booth and talked about the weather. Maybe you know the wind destroyed one of their growing tunnels last spring. Maybe you've watched their children grow up behind the farmers market table.

You aren't just consuming something anymore.

You're participating in someone else's life.

And they're participating in yours.

Your five dollars doesn't disappear into an enormous supply chain. It lands in the hands of someone who might spend it at the hardware store down the street, hire someone from the community, buy from another farmer, sponsor a local soccer team, donate produce to a neighborhood refrigerator, or pay the teenager helping with Saturday morning's harvest.

The tomato becomes a thread.

So does the loaf of bread.

So does the dozen eggs.

Eventually, enough threads become a fabric.

That's community.

Corporate food systems have spent decades teaching us to think about food almost entirely as consumers: What is cheapest? What is fastest? What can I get in one trip?

But maybe that is too small a way to think about something we do three times a day.

Food is one of the most frequent economic decisions we make. Again and again, week after week, we decide where our money goes—and whose work gets to continue.

Buying local doesn't have to mean an all-or-nothing lifestyle overhaul.

You don't have to swear off grocery stores.

You don't have to grow everything yourself.

Just move a few things closer to home.

Buy your eggs from someone nearby.

Pick up vegetables at a farm stand when you can.

Learn the name of the person growing your greens.

Choose the local loaf.

Ask restaurants where their ingredients come from.

Spend ten or twenty dollars of your grocery budget with someone in your own community, and then do it again next week.

Because something changes when we begin feeding one another again.

We start recognizing each other.

We start depending on each other.

We start caring whether the farm down the road survives, whether the neighborhood bakery makes it through another year, and whether the family selling peaches had a good harvest.

And they start caring about us, too.

Maybe rebuilding community doesn't begin with an enormous program or some grand cultural shift.

Maybe part of it happens somewhere much more ordinary:

Across a farmers market table.

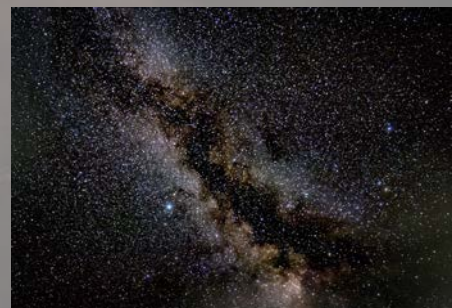

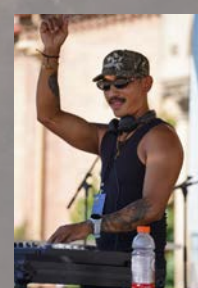

At a roadside stand.

Over a carton of eggs passed from one neighbor to another.

Maybe one of the simplest ways to build a community where people truly belong to one another is to start eating like we belong to each other.

HITTIN' THE STREETS

CARSEN KAI MANN

RAMBLIN THROUGH OGDEN

The distance from my front door to the Ogden train station is about a mile and a half as the crow flies. Tack on another half mile and you've got the walking distance.

Whichever road I choose has an abundance of historic houses and buildings. Some are in disrepair, some have been altered to the point that you would never guess they were over a century old, while others look as new as the day they were built.

The divergence between the revived mansions in the historic districts and the dilapidated homes in the poorer parts of the city forces us to ask what the needs of a community are. How do we continue to preserve our history while at the same time helping those that need help? Can we alleviate financial poverty while preserving history? What does the preservation of a 75-year-old mansion mean if you haven't eaten in a few days?

Deep in my soul, I believe that newly constructed homes sap the soul out of a neighborhood. Cheaply and quickly built, they look like a pile of stucco and bricks among the seraphim. But humans need shelter, it is the very basis of the Hierarchy of Needs, and the best way to give them shelter is to build new homes for them to live in. But at the same time, without history, we are merely individuals within a vacuum, with no idea where we came from and no clue where to go.

As I make my way through these old Ogden streets, sweet reggae music, born of sufferation and expressed through syn-copation, is playing in my ears. Reggae is the music of a people on the move and Ogden is certainly on the move. There is new construction everywhere and the old residents are being pushed out by higher prices.

So many of these reggae songs, penned in praise of His Majesty and written by the downtrodden of Jamaica, seem to have a stunningly natural fit in this thirsty desert land.

This is a city that has been erected upon stolen Shoshone land by disciples of a white supremacist doctrine. This formerly working-class town was where the Porters and Waiters found work serving train passengers, the Chinese and Japanese immigrants prepared the food of their fathers for the displaced sons and daughters of Europe, and where anti-Mormons found a place to live amongst polygamists.

Utah's second city was as much of a melting pot as Salt Lake, if not more so. It was a booming railroad town through which transcontinental passengers were required to pass. Even during prohibition, citizens and visitors alike could follow a river of liquor that flowed down 25th Street from its headwaters at Union Station and down through the numerous brothels that kept lonely men warm for a price. Millionaires and American barons built their mansions up on the hills above the gangsters and gunmen who had found a home in the city's rough streets.

As I continue my walk past these very mansions and houses, the prayers to the Conquering Lion penetrate my ears. The technology of Babylon allows the prayers to consume my mind with the spiritual message as I stroll past the scars of poverty. "I don't want no peace," the prophet sings, "I want equal rights and justice." The downpressed exist in every corner of the world, theirs is truly a global movement.

I feel a mixture of a depressed and anxious malaise as I walk by so many run-down historic buildings. No one could possibly see these buildings in the way that I do. They are a reminder of the past and a dream-like perfection that could never last. If they were restored to their original form, they would only be a shadow of what they once had been. But to destroy and replace them would erase a story of struggle. This erasure would force the history to be forgotten and replace it with a false sense of meritocratic hard work. It would erase the labor that had gone into the constructing of the building. It would erase the truth of the haves vs. the have-nots.

What does the future of a city hold? My city. Your city. Can a city, town, village, state, country, or place preserve its past and its sense of self while still barreling into the future? And what past do we preserve? The racist past? The blue-collar past? The imperialist past? What good does all this preservation even do?

I must confess that I am a believer in historic preservation. I have donated much of my hard-earned money towards efforts to preserve that which once was, but the world never stops moving. Whether or not we greet the future with open arms, it will arrive as long as the Earth keeps spinning; with or without our consent.

Unfortunately, I don't have the answers. I guess the solution is to preserve that which the community deems to be worth preserving. This essay has gotten me nowhere. I guess all I can do is put my shoes on, put my headphones in, and stroll through the city as time passes me by as quickly and indifferently as the passing cars.

OGDEN'S NOT-SO-DEFINITIVE GUIDE TO DATE NIGHTS

By Amber Shelton

I love dates. Both kinds, actually, because the fruit isn't half bad. But sometimes, when my darling gives me the blessed news that we do, in fact, have a sitter for the weekend, I find myself woefully unprepared for what to do with that time. Nearly every page in Street Ogden is sure to help with that problem, but sometimes stringing all of the date ideas together is the hardest part.

Spend some time up north

If you have your fishing license, spend a little time at the small pond next to Harrisville Park. Or—my preference—head to Cold Springs Trout Farm for even prettier scenery and an easier catch, all with no license required. They'll even clean and fillet your fish for you if you'd like. Then, when you've got your fish in hand, head home and spend a cozy, domestic evening cooking it up for dinner. If that doesn't work out the way you planned (don't worry—I can't cook either), head up to Purple Sky Winery for a fancy evening dinner and Utah-made wine.

For a scenic day in the Ogden Valley

Head east on Twelfth Street and take a scenic drive around Pineview Reservoir until you reach Huntsville. The drive shouldn't take long, but if you or your partner are anything like me, you'll need to stop a handful of times to take pictures for Instagram. When you get to Huntsville, stop at the Green House Gallery to admire Huntsville's best historic art pieces. Then swing by First Lift Coffee for a cozy drink and keep the conversation from the drive going a little longer. Then surprise your partner with a session at the HALO Observatory at the same location and stay the night at the adjoining Compass Rose Lodge to make it extra special.

For when you're sneaking away for lunch

Try the Lotus Café. Pair your entrée with a latte or tea for the perfect brunch-y meal.

For a picnic in the park

Swing by The Romantics Archive or Charms and Chapters (or even the Ogden Library) and pick out a book for each of you. Then snag a charcuterie board and wine from The Mercantile on 25th (they even have non-alcoholic options if that's more your jam). Take your supplies and a picnic basket to the Ogden Botanical Gardens for a scenic afternoon with great books, great cheese, and great company.

For a wild Wednesday night

Head over to Neptune Skating at around 9 p.m. for swing dancing lessons! Then, to keep the wild night going, head to LAB arcade bar afterwards for drinks and arcade games.

For a mild Wednesday night

I have always felt closer to my partner after an evening of volunteering together. With that in mind, try volunteering at Youth Impact. Orientation for new volunteers are typically on Wednesdays at 5:30, but check their website before you head that way to confirm. After volunteering, walk south to UTOG brewery for a lovely dinner, or east toward Skinny Dogz for arcade games and bowling. Fun fact: my darling and I had our first date at Skinny Dogz!

For a fancy dinner and a show

Check out Onstage Ogden for their upcoming shows. When the fated night arrives, head to Hearth on; 25th first for an evening of fine dining before the show starts. Then head to La Crepe Og Gourmet after the show ends for dessert.

For a healthier alternative

Hold hands until they get unromantically sweaty while you hike on Green Pond Trail, which is located just off of Snowbasin Rd. Then go to a U-Pick like Ogden Bay Produce and try to plan a dinner using the produce you picked that day.

For an I-don't-like-hiking alternative

Bike northeast up the Ogden River Parkway. Stop at Steve's Black Sabbath BBQ for lunch, or keep biking until you reach Rainbow Gardens and eat at The Greenery Restaurant.

For right after a temple session

Kneaders and Farr Better Ice Cream are always packed right after temple sessions, though those are great stops if the lines aren't bad! Otherwise, cross the street and walk to Kesari Indian Kitchen for some of the best Indian food Ogden has to offer. Then walk five doors down to the Jungle Room Plant Co to find a new "love fern" you both secretly know you won't be able to keep alive.

I'm still not sure!

Try signing up for a Taste of Ogden Food Tour. After the tour ends, wander through some of the art stalls at The Monarch and find a new favorite artist. The food tour will give you restaurant ideas that you can use next time you need date ideas, and The Monarch has plenty of events that you can put on your calendar while you're there.

Ultimately, whether you need a place to take your most recent right-swipe or you're upkeeping the relationship that's seen you through four kids and a dog, Ogden has everything any hopeless romantic could want!

greenacresdairy.com
A longtime Weber County fall favorite on a working family dairy farm. Green Acres offers corn mazes, wagon rides, a pumpkin patch with pick-your-own pumpkins, farm animals, a giant slide, corn pit, hay maze, tractor trikes and farmyard games. Haunted Maze nights are offered Fridays and Saturdays in October.

The Corn Maze & Pumpkin Patch

season runs September 18 through October 30. Closed Sundays. Hours and admission vary by day and activity; check the website before heading out.

HAPPY PUMPKIN CORN MAZE

3462 W 2900 S, West Haven
happypumpkinmaze.com
Open September 18 through October 31, Happy Pumpkin combines a giant corn maze and pumpkins with slides, swings, games, food, photo areas, music and a lighted dance floor. For those wanting something considerably less wholesome after dark, the Field of Fear haunted attraction operates Thursday through Saturday nights. A separate family-friendly corn maze remains available for those who would rather not have something leap out of the corn at them.

HUNT FAMILY FARM

3511 N 3900 W, Plain City
801-458-0151
huntsfamilyfarm.com
A real family farm turned autumn playground, with a corn maze, pumpkin patch, fall courtyard activities, food and treats around the fire. For something different, climb aboard the Zombie Hunters hay wagon, grab a paintball blaster and help defend the farm from live zombies lurking through the corn maze. Fall season traditionally runs September 20 through October 31.

McFARLAND FAMILY FARMS – THE WHITE BARN FARM

719 S 6300 E, Huntsville
801-814-6494
mcfarlandfamilyfarms.com
Few pumpkin patches come with scenery like this one. The White Barn Farm sits in Ogden Valley near Pineview Reservoir and opens its fields each autumn for U-pick pumpkins. Walk through the fields to choose your own or shop pumpkins, decorative gourds and fall squash around the farm store. The pumpkin season begins the third Saturday in September and continues through October 31. McFarland also sells locally grown seasonal produce and fall decorations.

AUTUMN IN THE MOUNTAINS

SNOWWIESN OKTOBER-FEST AT SNOWBASIN

Snowbasin Resort
3925 E Snowbasin Road, Huntsville, 801-620-1000
snowbasin.com
Beer, bratwurst, mountain air and autumn leaves: Snowbasin's annual SnowWiesn brings a little Bavaria to the Wasatch Mountains every Saturday and Sunday from August 29 through October 18, noon to 6 p.m. The celebration includes Bavarian-inspired food, local craft beer served in steins, live music, a mountain market, family activities and such Oktoberfest traditions as stein-holding competitions. It is also dog-friendly. Combine it with a scenic gondola ride or mountain hike and you've pretty much nailed an Ogden Valley autumn day.

BUY THE HARVEST

OGDEN BAY PRODUCE

2976 S 4700 W, Ogden
801-791-9751
For those who would rather bring autumn home than merely look at it, Ogden Bay Produce offers a hands-on farm experience with seasonal U-pick produce, flowers and fall harvest items including pumpkins. Availability changes with the harvest, which is rather the point.

McFARLAND FAMILY FARMS PRODUCE STANDS

West Weber and locations throughout Weber County
mcfarlandfamilyfarms.com
Sweet corn gives way to pumpkins, gourds, squash, onions and other late-season produce as summer turns toward autumn. McFarland operates seasonal farm stands around Weber County and offers straw bales and other harvest items useful for fall decorating as available.

COCHRAN PRODUCE

1860 Skyline Drive, Ogden
A neighborhood produce stand with a loyal following for fresh seasonal fruits and vegetables. Autumn brings pumpkins and gourds and turns the stand into a particularly colorful stop for porch and Halloween decorating.

AFTER DARK

HAUNTED HOLLOW

1550 S 1900 W, West Haven
hauntedhollowutah.com
This one is not a cute pumpkin patch with a skeleton hanging near the cash register. Haunted Hollow sends visitors into 13 acres of dark woods, haunted structures and outdoor scares. For 2026 it operates Friday and Saturday nights in September from 7:30–11 p.m.; Wednesday and Thursday nights in October from 7:30–10 p.m.; and Friday and Saturday nights in October from 7:30 p.m.–midnight.

OGDEN GHOST TOURS – HISTORIC 25TH STREET

Union Station Plaza
2500 Wall Avenue, Ogden
usghostadventures.com
Walk Historic 25th Street after dark while hearing stories of the people, tragedies, legends and supposed spirits connected with Ogden's colorful past. The approximately one-hour outdoor walking tour covers about a mile downtown and includes tales associated with Union Station, Peery's Egyptian Theater, the Bigelow and other historic locations. Tours are offered nightly, making this one an autumn activity that doesn't have to wait for Halloween.

FALL COLOR: TAKE THE LONG WAY HOME

Sometimes the best autumn activity costs nothing.

Pack some coffee, grab a jacket, turn the phone off for an hour and go see what the mountains are doing.

OGDEN CANYON SCENIC BYWAY

Follow Highway 39 through Ogden Canyon toward Pineview Reservoir.

WHEELER CREEK

OLD SNOWBASIN ROAD

One of the area's classic autumn drives through scrub oak and aspen.

Ride, hike or simply wander the resort grounds while the Wasatch changes color.

CAUSEY RESERVOIR

A little farther up Ogden Valley and well worth the drive when the surrounding hills turn red, orange and gold.

POWDER MOUNTAIN & EDEN

Take the drive through Ogden Valley and climb toward Powder Mountain for expansive views of the valley below.

BONNEVILLE SHORELINE TRAIL

For those who prefer their leaves on foot, the trail along Ogden's east bench gives broad views across the city while the foothills change around you.

And remember: fall in Northern Utah does not work according to anybody's publishing schedule. Colors can come early, late, brilliantly or briefly. When the mountains turn, go.

Weber Fridge

The Weber Fridge is a mutual aid organization focused on feeding those within our community, no questions asked. It was founded by local concerned citizens who recognized a need and responded. The Weber Fridge has no top-down hierarchy and no barriers to entry. It is not about charity but reciprocal sharing of resources so that the whole community can be stronger.

The Weber Fridge is located 301 28th St., in Ogden, and there is a fridge and a pantry available. Weber Fridge also hosts monthly lunches on the second Saturday of every month and Sunday breakfasts. All are welcome either to eat or volunteer. If you would like to get involved, you can bring food in person, donate financially, assist with the lunches and breakfasts, or run a food drive at your work, church, or social club.

The pantry is hand-built by volunteers, local people in our community with time and a desire to help. You can also spread the word.

A few things to remember when talking to your friends about this: If you provide homemade food, please put a date on it and list all ingredients. Do not donate expired or opened food. Please, no alcoholic beverages. Possibly most importantly, there is no barrier to who can receive food. If you are hungry, you are welcome, and it is open 24/7. The Weber Fridge is located outside in front of the Urban Prairie Agriculture store at 301 28th St., in Ogden. weberfridge@gmail.com

Empowering Voters Strengthening Democracy in Weber County

By Arlene Anderson-President Elect, League of Women Voters of Weber County

Democracy is more than an election day or a ballot. It is the ongoing work of a community choosing to stay informed, participate, and engage respectfully with one another. In Weber County, democracy shows up in local council meetings, school board decisions, ballot initiatives, voting with mail in ballots or at the polls, and conversations about the future of our neighborhoods. It belongs to all of us.

The League of Women Voters of Weber County exists to strengthen that shared responsibility. We are a nonpartisan organization of local volunteers working to support a healthy, inclusive democracy. Our goals are clear: promote transparency & accountability in government, ensure voter protection, mobilize voters, provide voter education, and ensure voter access.

Nonpartisan means that the League does not support or oppose political parties or candidates. It also means our work is guided by fairness, balance, and accuracy. We do not tell voters how to vote. Instead, we provide clear, factual, and unbiased information so individuals can make decisions based on their own values and priorities. Ensuring that all perspectives are heard is central to this work. The League hosts inclusive candidate forums, presents multiple viewpoints on public policy issues, and creates opportunities for civil, respectful dialogue. We rely on credible sources, verified data, and transparent research methods to ensure the information we share is factual and trustworthy. When the League takes positions on issues, those positions are the result of careful study, member consensus, and alignment with democratic principles, not partisan ideology.

Democracy depends on more than the right to vote. It depends on access to reliable information, confidence in election systems, and the belief that participation matters. Weber County is home to diverse communities with different experiences, perspectives, and priorities. Yet we are united by a shared stake in local decisions that affect our schools, public services, infrastructure, and quality of life. When residents understand how local government works and how their voices can be heard, democracy becomes stronger and more resilient.

Locally, the League works to register voters, explain ballot issues, share election information, and encourage informed civic participation. These efforts are educational, not political. They are designed to build understanding and trust while reducing confusion and misinformation. Defending democracy means protecting the processes that allows it to function fairly and transparently. It means supporting free and fair elections, encouraging respectful discourse, and standing against misinformation. It also means recognizing that democracy is not self-sustaining. It requires continuous care, education, and engagement, especially at the local level.

For more than a century, the League of Women Voters has believed that an informed electorate is the foundation of a healthy democracy. That belief continues to guide our work here in Weber County. We invite all residents, regardless of political affiliation, to engage with the democratic process, seek reliable information, and participate in shaping our shared future. Democracy works best when it is inclusive, informed, and active. Empowering Voters. Defending Democracy. These goals are not partisan. They are essential to our community.

PINEVIEW DRAW-DOWN MAKES WAY FOR CRITICAL PIPELINE WORK

Pineview Reservoir is being lowered to a level not seen in decades as Ogden City prepares to replace a critical section of its aging drinking-water pipeline beneath the lake.

Despite some descriptions circulating online, Pineview Dam itself is not being drained for dam repairs. The reservoir is being drawn down to approximately 1.7 percent of capacity, or about 2,000 acre-feet, so crews can reach the lakebed and install a new 36-inch pipeline beside the existing line.

The underwater pipeline has served the community for approximately 55 years and connects Ogden City's wellfield north of Pineview with the transmission system through Ogden Canyon. Sections farther down the canyon are nearly a century old. The deteriorating system is estimated to lose more than one million gallons of water each day and delivers roughly half of Ogden's drinking water, serving more than 120,000 people.

Construction across Pineview is expected to begin around September 15 and continue through late December or early January. The existing line will remain operational during construction and will later be rehabilitated as a backup.

The reservoir was already headed toward unusually low levels following Utah's record-low 2025-2026 snowpack. Additional controlled releases are being routed downstream and stored at Willard Bay rather than wasted.

Boat ramps have become inaccessible as the shoreline retreats, although some beaches, campgrounds and day-use areas remain open. Temporary fishing limits have also been increased to reduce fish losses.

Refilling is expected to begin in January 2027. Officials say an average winter snowpack could refill Pineview next year, but Mother Nature, as always, gets the final vote.

Buddhi Yoga is a space to land — a place where breath slows, bodies soften, and something quiet inside begins to speak. We've been part of the Ogden community for over a decade (you may remember us as Lotus Yoga), and through the years, our roots have deepened — in practice, in people, and in purpose. We offer a rich variety of classes — including Vinyasa, Kundalini, Yin, Restorative, Yoga Nidra, Sound Healing, and Ashtanga — designed to meet you wherever you are on your journey.

Our intention is simple: to hold space for growth, healing, and connection. Every class, workshop, and training we offer is guided by heart, integrity, and deep respect for the many layers of yoga. Come as you are, and meet yourself on the mat — with us.

BRANDON LEWIS

OGDEN TATTOO ARTIST

HEAVY DUTY TATTOO

BY ROBIN BROWN

I got my first tattoo in Salt Lake City when I was 18. At the risk of dating myself, that was 30-ish years ago. There were two main shops, and both were run by bikers. As you can imagine, it was not a very welcoming or friendly environment. It was as if they went out of their way to make me feel uncomfortable and actually took a little joy from that. But I went through with it because I really wanted a tattoo.

It was the cliché barely legal first tattoo—a tiny butterfly that took all of five minutes to finish. My little 18-year-old self felt so badass! I had pushed through the discomfort of being made fun of and teased by these much older roughneck bikers, as well as the anticipation of not knowing how painful it might be. Suffering those men was far worse than the physical pain, which was surprisingly bearable. I knew I wanted more, but I did not want to go through the condescending B.S. that would come with it.

That experience brings me to the story of how Brandon Lewis, owner of Heavy Duty Tattoo, became one of the most respected tattooers—not just in Ogden, but nationwide. He is best known for his timeless Traditional and Japanese styles, including vibrantly colored dragons, flowers, tigers, birds, and pretty much any animal you would find in Japanese lore or old traditional tattoo books.

He is also well known for making tattoo machines. Through trial and error, he quickly figured out how to build each machine to his specifications based on its intended purpose: coloring, shading, linework, and more. His machines have become sought after by tattoo artists all over the world.

When Brandon was 13, his parents divorced, and he moved to Layton with his mom, Kim. From the get-go he was a pretty rebellious character. He quit going to school altogether to run around raising hell with his friends while his mom was at work. At a local convenience store, he came across a biker magazine with an order form on the back offering a tattoo magazine for one dollar. He filled it out, sent it in, and waited anxiously for it to arrive. Once the magazine gave him access to tattoo supplies he could order, that is exactly what he did.

When he was 16, he sold his Sega Genesis to a friend for the money to buy tattoo equipment, then turned around and traded the same guy a tattoo to get it back. As Brandon put it, “That’s how the hustle started.”

He then started tattooing out of his house. His mom would come home from work to find the place full of bikers and strippers, all getting tattooed by her underage son. This became a regular thing for years until, in 1993, he was able to open his first shop in Ogden, Boulevard Tattoo.

Not only did he have zero experience running a shop, but he also did not have access to legitimate, seasoned tattooers who could teach him the ropes. As I mentioned earlier, there were a couple of shops at that time, and those shops were run by surly, crass bikers who were outwardly uninterested in helping any newcomer.

“The old guys had secrets and kept them guarded. I had to know the secrets!” he said.

Despite his complete lack of education in running a business, the shop exploded with immediate success.

“Our egos were huge,” he said. “We had so much money. We partied all the time.”

It wasn’t long before life started to feel out of control and chaotic. Things that had once been effortless and exciting were now hard and frustrating. He had run himself right into the ground. Crash and burn!

After only one year, Brandon left the shop. He needed to reset. This is when he met his wife, Cristine. A friend had set them up and brought her to the bar where they would meet. Not realizing this was a date, Brandon rolled in three hours late. All night, he kept calling her his wife. Two months later, they were married!

He continued to work out of his house and would go down to Las Vegas some weekends to work at a friend’s shop. It took a few years, but they finally reached a place in life where he could open his own shop again. That was the beginning of Heavy Duty Tattoo. The first location was near Riverdale Road and 36th Street, next door to an old blade and saw shop. Eight years later, they moved behind Newgate Mall. In 2012, Brandon was able to buy a permanent home for Heavy Duty at 1522 Washington Boulevard, where it remains today.

When you walk in, there is a fabulous black-and-grey checkered tile floor surrounded by brightly colored walls dripping with custom paintings and other artwork. Each artist has an antique rolltop desk in his room, and there are animal skulls, furs, and various pieces of taxidermy throughout.

The boys—Scott, Damian, Shae, and Dave—hold it down! They joke constantly, razz each other, and always seem to be having a blast. Between the four of them and Brandon, there is not a tattoo they couldn’t handle. From walk-ins to full-body pieces in every different style, they have it covered!

With no plans to retire and an “I’ll quit when I’m dead” attitude, I see this as a phoenix-rising-from-the-ashes story. He pulled himself out of the darkness and gave himself another chance to enjoy life and be successful. He says he owes most of that to his wife, Cristine. They made it through the tough times together. They raised their family and now have two grandchildren.

I asked him what is different now and what he does to keep himself grounded.

“I meditate, and I don’t carry that ego around anymore. That rock really weighs you down. I focus on what really matters in life. Tattooing isn’t something I do. It’s who I am, and I’m so grateful.”

Heavy Duty is currently the oldest shop in town and is highly regarded and respected by the tattoo community. Brandon has held on to the traditional ways, which set him apart from others. The tattoo world is rapidly changing and evolving, but Brandon Lewis has kept it old school and continues to represent like a true O.G.!

What Makes an Amber an Amber?

BY AMBER GABRIEL

Beer can get complicated fast. Walk into a brewery today and the board may read like another language: IPA, pilsner, porter, stout, amber, lager, kölsch, saison, sour and a dozen variations in between. But underneath all those names are a few basic ingredients and centuries of brewing tradition.

So what exactly is an amber beer?

The name gives away the most obvious clue: color. Amber beers generally range from a deep golden copper to reddish brown. That color comes primarily from the malted barley used to brew them.

Beer begins with grain—most commonly barley—that has been malted, meaning the grain is allowed to begin germinating and is then dried or roasted. The brewer crushes the malt and mixes it with hot water in a process called mashing. This converts starches in the grain into fermentable sugars.

For an amber, brewers use a combination of lighter base malts and darker, more deeply kilned or caramelized malts. Those specialty malts give the beer its copper-red color and, more importantly, its characteristic flavor: toasted bread, caramel, biscuit, nuts and sometimes a touch of toffee.

The sweet liquid extracted from the grain, called wort, is boiled and hops are added. Hops contribute bitterness, flavor and aroma while balancing the sweetness of the malt. The wort is then cooled, yeast is introduced, and fermentation begins as the yeast consumes sugars and produces alcohol and carbon dioxide.

Amber vs. Lager

Here's where beer terminology gets tricky: an amber and a lager aren't necessarily opposites.

Lager actually describes a family of beers and a fermentation method. Lager yeast generally ferments at cooler temperatures than ale yeast and the beer is traditionally conditioned cold. The result tends to be clean, crisp and smooth.

An amber can be brewed as an amber ale or an amber lager. An amber ale uses warmer-fermenting ale yeast and may have more fruity yeast character. An amber lager combines those toasted, caramel malt flavors with the cleaner finish associated with lager fermentation.

So color alone doesn't tell you whether something is an ale or lager.

And What About Stout?

Now we're heading toward the dark side.

A stout uses much more heavily roasted malt or barley. Instead of the caramel, toasted-bread character associated with amber beer, stout can bring flavors reminiscent of coffee, dark chocolate, burnt toast, molasses or roasted grain.

And despite appearances, dark does not automatically mean stronger. A nearly black stout can contain less alcohol than a pale golden beer. Color, alcohol content and heaviness aren't interchangeable.

Think of the spectrum this way: a light lager might emphasize crispness and refreshment. An amber moves deeper into malt territory, bringing copper color, toast and caramel while remaining highly drinkable. A stout takes roasting considerably further, producing those dark colors and coffee-and-chocolate flavors.

That makes amber particularly fitting for autumn. Its copper and reddish hues practically look like October in a glass, while its toasted malt character fits naturally alongside cooler evenings, food, music and Oktoberfest season.

AMBER BEER TOASTED, SMOOTH & BALANCED

Amber beers get their beautiful copper color and rich malt character from a blend of specialty malts. The result is a beer that's flavorful and approachable—perfect for any season but especially right now.

THE BREWING PROCESS

1. MALT

Malted barley is the foundation. Different malts bring different colors and flavors.

2. MASH

Crushed malt is mixed with hot water to convert starches into fermentable sugars.

3. BOIL & HOP

The sweet wort is boiled and hops are added for bitterness, flavor and aroma.

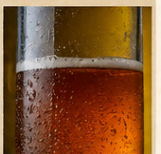

4. COOL

The wort is cooled quickly in preparation for fermentation.

5. FERMENT

Yeast is added and converts sugars into alcohol and carbon dioxide.

6. CONDITION

The beer is conditioned for flavor, clarity and a smooth, enjoyable finish.

STREET OGDEN WORDS TO OUR READERS

STREET OGDEN BEGINS FOURTH YEAR PUBLISHING IN OGDEN SINCE 1984

By Joseph Isador, Editor

AUTUMN is one of my favorite seasons. They all have their distinct qualities, especially here on the Wasatch Front, where we experience all of the seasons completely. But who cannot like nature's changing colors and cooler days and nights before the hopefully big snows, white Christmas and full season of skiing to come?

Autumn is especially special for us at Street Ogden Magazine, as this marks our anniversary/birthday season of publishing. We began three years ago with our Autumn 2023 issue. That means we officially begin our fourth year.

A lot of exciting events have occurred in that time, most of all thanks to our advertisers and readers. We grew from 32 pages to 88 pages. That was fast. The magazine goes out to our readers, always FREE, at over 150 locations throughout Ogden and Weber County. It is a weekly job to restock them, especially at high-traffic locations and all of the hotels. One of the hotels downtown keeps them at the front desk and hands them out to all those checking in, as everyone wants to know what to do in a new town, especially one as exciting as Ogden. Our guests and visitors get an update on all the great Dining and Night Spots, Shopping, Tattoo Salons, and Health and Personal Care locations. Our calendars and guides also tell them where to go and what to do for fun. We are told all the time that folks tell businesses they saw their ad in the magazine they received at the hotels. We are happy to provide that service.

We had an exciting experience this last season. We were contacted by the organizers of the PGA Tour at the Ogden Golf & Country Club to see if we would provide 350 copies of our magazine for them to hand out to national and international golfers and guests. The call came just before the Summer issue, so we printed extra copies for them without touching our regular 10,000 copies that go out each season. We heard back that the magazines were much appreciated by their guests, and many took advantage of our fine establishments. That makes us happy.

As we write this message, we are down to the last copies, which will be restocked through the final week and spread thin so our outlets are never out of copies. Then, all of a sudden, the new issue appears. We are always excited to hit those first routes, watch them fly off the shelves and racks, and receive the feedback.

We now move into our fourth year of publishing this round, as we do have roots in past publications in Ogden. We began in 1984-89 with Junction City News, right on Historic 25th Street, printing 30,000 copies monthly and distributing them throughout the Wasatch Front. That is where we got the tagline "The Wasatch Connection." We merged with what is now Salt Lake City Weekly, which was then Private Eye. That was an exciting move, and it was exciting to see City Weekly grow and continue publishing weekly for forty years. Then again, in the 2000s, just in time for the Winter Olympics, we began again in 2001 with Street Magazine. It ran until 2008, when it was paused with the intention of beginning again.

It only took a few decades, but here we are back on the STREETS. For you! For all of us! We are grateful to have been a part of Ogden's growth through the decades and what we refer to as Ogden's renaissances.

First came the renovation of Historic 25th Street, and the second renaissance arrived with the Winter Olympics, the Junction, the River Walkway and infill construction on vacant properties covering almost the entire 200 block. Now another period of huge growth has come to Ogden, with new buildings and development throughout the city.

Thankfully, restoration of historic buildings is alive and well. It was not always like that, as we lost so many incredible buildings in the '70s and '80s. A new awareness of these monuments began in the 2000s as new blood among developers and city officials moved in that direction. Yet, even with blocks of buildings being torn down, we are left with an amazing inventory of historic business buildings and homes. We just need to treasure and maintain them. Each generation seems to find love for our history and buildings. We can grieve the lost structures and still celebrate what we have. Preservation first is our motto, and that goes with our own theme for this and past publications: "Where the past meets the present, and the future is now!" That is how we approach every issue.

We are grateful to each and every one of you, our readers. You are the ones who make it happen. We are grateful that you support local businesses. They are the backbone and heart of our community. Always have been, always will be. That is what we are all about. Our businesses tell us about new business they receive from Street Ogden Magazine, and folks tell them how they found them. What a perfect synergy between us all. We put it out, businesses relay their messages about services and events, and you respond. We have a high rate of advertiser retention, as most have been with us from the first issues. For that, we are thankful. We like going to work for them and being of service to you. We do this with an amazing team, the STREET TEAM. We take pride in our writers, artists, photographers and all the creative contributions we receive. The way we have grown is totally grassroots and organic. We see a bright future for us, for you and for our business community, in spite of uncertain times and things outside our local community over which we have no control.

We are happily in this together, supporting each other just as we should and just as generations before us did—from pioneers and immigrants to the homegrown people of Ogden. Our past is unique in this fine city and the communities surrounding Ogden, as the railroad brought so many different cultures here, and generations still live here. It is why Ogden is unique and colorful.

The Weber County Heritage Foundation holds an annual festival called "People of Weber County" at Fort Buenaventura, which celebrates this unique blend of so many cultures. Those are the roots of our community. From the Shoshone people and Mormon pioneers to the Chinese, Italian and Irish workers brought by the railroad, and Mexican families who came for agricultural and other jobs, we are all here together, thriving.

We see a great future for our community of Ogden and Weber County and beyond. So much intersects here in this beautiful valley of nature, surrounded by mountains, rivers, a lake, ski resorts, history, historic buildings and people as the seasons change. And we LOVE IT!

STREET OGDEN THREE YEARS YOUNG OVER FORTY YEARS OF PUBLISHING IN OGDEN 1984-2026

"WHERE THE PAST MEETS THE PRESENT & THE FUTURE IS NOW!"

FLO

Drive into the Ogden City Cemetery after dark. Find the grave of Florence Louise Grange. Turn the car until your headlights face her stone.

Flash them three times.

Then turn them off—and wait.

That is how generations of Ogden teenagers have gone looking for Flo, the cemetery's most famous ghost. Some went because they believed. Others went laughing, packed into a car with friends and determined to prove the whole thing ridiculous. But when the cemetery became dark and still, even the skeptics watched the road a little more closely.

The legend says Flo was a 15-year-old Ogden girl in love with a boy her parents did not approve of. One night she secretly waited for him to pick her up. Some say to elope. His signal would be three flashes of the headlights. When she saw a car approaching, she stepped into the road, believing it was him, and was struck and killed.

Some versions say they planned to attend an Ogden High School dance. Others say they were running away together. In another telling, it was Flo's mother who was coming for her. There is even a version claiming she choked on a piece of Christmas candy.

The stories disagree. That is the nature of folklore. But the ritual remains the same: face the grave and flash your headlights three times.

Witnesses say Flo seldom appears all at once. First comes a faint green glow near the grave or along the cemetery road. The light begins to move. It grows into an orb, a haze or a greenish mist drifting toward the waiting car.

Then it begins to take shape.

Some describe the figure of a young girl in a dress. Others have seen only the lower half of a woman while her face and shoulders remained hidden in the mist. Visitors have reported seeing someone cross the road, disappear in front of their headlights and reappear behind the car.

One especially eerie version says Flo moves toward the passenger side, reaches for the door handle and tries to get inside, perhaps still believing the person she waited for so long ago has finally arrived.

There are stories of engines refusing to start as she approaches. Friends scream at the driver to go, but the car remains dead until the apparition vanishes. Then the engine suddenly turns over, and they race from the cemetery.

Others have waited for hours and seen nothing more than a distant glow. Some later decided it was headlights reflecting from passing traffic. Some remain certain they saw Flo. Almost everyone remembers the fear, the excitement and the desperate rush to get away.

The historical record tells a quieter story. Florence Louise Grange was born November 24, 1903, and died at her family home on Grant Avenue on December 29, 1918. Her newspaper obituary listed "heart weakness." Her death certificate reportedly cited probable endocarditis, with influenza contributing during the terrible epidemic of 1918.

Those are the documented facts.

But facts do not tell us how Florence Louise became Flo, when the first headlights were flashed at her grave or who first saw a green mist moving through the cemetery. Did someone invent the forbidden romance? Did another piece of the story disappear with her family? If something scandalous had happened, would a grieving family in 1918 have allowed it into the newspaper?

We do not know.

What we do know is that the story endured. It passed from one generation of Ogden young people to the next, gathering details, sightings and shivers along the way.

The gravestone says, "Gone but not forgotten."

More than a century later, that much is certainly true.

GRANGE—Florence Louise Grange, Grange, 15 year-old daughter of Ralph M. and Dottie Mumford Grange, died at 5 a. m. yesterday at the home, 2827 Grant avenue of heart weakness. The decedent has been a student of Ogden high school. Besides her parents the following brothers and sisters survive: Ralph Jr., Leona, Thelma and Dorothy. The body is at the Larkin chapel awaiting funeral arrangements.
